

5 Money Rules

A free starter sheet. Five small if-then habits that add friction where money tends to leak. Pick one, try it for a month, see how it feels.

1

The 24-Hour Cart Rule

If it isn't food, medicine, or a bill, leave it in the cart for a day. The urge often fades faster than the delivery would.

2

Pay Yourself First

When income lands, move a set amount to savings before you open any spending app. Money that never sits in checking is harder to spend by accident.

3

Name Every Transfer

Label savings moves with a purpose: "Rent Buffer", "Trip", "Tax". A named pot can feel more like yours than a vague pile.

4

One-Click Off

Remove saved cards from your browser and shopping apps. A few extra seconds at checkout can do more than willpower.

5

The Subscription Autopsy

Once a quarter, list every recurring charge. If you can't name a recent use, consider cancelling or pausing it.

Try this week

Choose one rule. Write it on a phone note or a card in your wallet. Check it off each day you follow it. Small and visible beats big and forgotten.

Want the full set?

This sheet is a taste. 27 Money Rules That Stick is the longer BlazeRidge field pack: more if-then rules for checkout, payday, subscriptions and habits.

More from BlazeRidge:

dennisabt1-netizen.github.io/blazeridge-shop